A system for providing integrated system solutions includes a set of process descriptions; a set of work product descriptions; and engagement models collecting the process descriptions and work product descriptions into a models for implementing typical projects addressing marketplace requirements. A systems integration method includes the steps of defining an engagement model which will be used to address a market place requirement; utilizing the engagement model to create an industry-wide engagement template. Specific client requirements within the industry are then used by an implementation team to generate a client engagement template. The team then measures, monitors, and controls the implementation based on the client engagement template.
